

PUBLICATION ETHICS AND GUIDELINES

The Chesterton Review ©

The journal of the G. K. Chesterton Institute for Faith & Culture

The Chesterton Review© is the journal of the G. K. Chesterton Institute for Faith & Culture. It specializes in scholarship devoted to G. K. Chesterton and his intellectual circle, consisting of solicited articles (for special issues), unsolicited articles (for general issues), reprinting of original materials by Chesterton, and news and comments items which are reproduced with permission. All articles are reviewed by the editor and blind peer reviewed by members of the editorial board who are not affiliated to Seton Hall University. The editor reserves the right to reject without consultation manifestly unsuitable submissions. The editor and editorial board of The Chesterton Review reserve the right to edit solicited and unsolicited articles and book reviews, to return those edited manuscripts for further consideration by the author and, if no agreement is reached between the editors and author to decline to publish them. The journal cannot guarantee manuscript acceptance or a short peer review time. Articles and book reviews must be submitted as per the following guidelines.

The Chesterton Review is published in print and electronic form. The ISSN numbers are:

ISSN 0317-0500 Print Format

ISSN 1930-1294 Electronic Format

Standard Publication Agreement

Access to articles is limited to individual subscribers and subscribing institutions. No payment is required for submission of articles or made upon their publication.

Process regarding Research Misconduct

The editor and editorial board make strenuous efforts to ensure that all materials published in the Review adhere to the highest scholarly standards. Evidence of plagiarism or other forms of academic dishonesty are deemed to be in serious violation of the standards required for publication and therefore result in rejection of the manuscript.

Revenue Sources

The Chesterton Review is funded by subscriptions, some advertising revenue, and institutional support from Seton Hall University.

Publication Ethics Statement

The Chesterton Review assumes the importance of Chesterton's thought, but it is not an uncritical vehicle for it. Criticism of Chesterton is by no means excluded from its editorial content.

The editor and editorial board of The Chesterton Review are committed to the highest ethical standards. These standards apply to the editors no less than the authors published in the Review.

Authors are required to establish the scholarly value of their submissions by locating them within the discourse of Chesterton Studies. This scholarly value may take the form of original research or a review of existing literature. In the first instance, the author must indicate the originality of the research and of the conclusions drawn from it. In the second instance, the author must give a full account of the “state of the question” to which the article makes a contribution. Evidence of plagiarism or other forms of academic dishonesty are deemed to be in serious violation of the standards required for publication and therefore result in rejection of the manuscript. It is unacceptable to submit an article to more than one journal. Authors must indicate that The Chesterton Review is the sole journal to which the article is being submitted.

Authors must confirm that they have not used generative AI to contribute to the content, style, or citations of manuscripts submitted to The Chesterton Review. Any other author use of AI tools must be disclosed to the editors at the time of submission.

The Editors and Editorial Board evaluate submissions solely on the basis of academic merit. Every precaution is made to exclude personal preference and ad hominem considerations such as personal knowledge of the author.

Reviewers—The editorial board consists of Chesterton experts drawn from Seton Hall University and from outside Seton Hall University. Submissions are reviewed blindly by those members of the editorial board who are not associated with Seton Hall University. The same standards of scholarly objectivity required of authors and of the editor are also required of reviewers. A reviewer who finds a conflict of interest when reviewing a manuscript is required to acknowledge that conflict of interest and to decline to review it.

The Publisher—The Chesterton Review is published by the G. K. Chesterton Institute for Faith & Culture which is advised by a board of distinguished scholar and public intellectuals. In cases of alleged scholarly misconduct by authors, editors or reviewers, the publisher will respond to all such claims and adjudicate them.
